Chair, Federal Communications Commission

Dear Kevin Martin:

America's broadband Internet goals are going unmet and America's international position is rapidly falling. Many American families, schools and libraries cannot afford broadband and most of rural America cannot even get access to the broadband Internet.

Once online, many families are concerned about the growing threat to children of easily accessible indecent and pornographic material. And public safety organizations often can't work together due to incompatible data networks.

It doesn't have to be this way. I urge you to support the M2Z Networks (www.m2znetworks.com) plan to put America back on the right track by providing 95% of America with access to a free, fast, and family-friendly wireless broadband Internet. It's in the public interest because it will make us safer and more competitive, it will create equal opportunity, and it will improve our great country.

Please support M2Z today.

Sincerely,

Clifford Ssamuels Jr

Robert McDowell
Commissioner, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear Robert McDowell:

To Whom it may concern,

I am deeply concerned about the FCC's August 31, 2007 denial of M2Z networks request for spectrum to offer it's FREE internet service. I feel that the FCC decided that it's "process" for allocating spectrum was a higher priority than the well being of the very people our government is supposed to serve. The recent ruling also seemed to value the competitive "rights" of companies over the welfare of real people. (Companies which complained about a certain process being followed for allocating spectrum - though I suspect this was a thinly veiled "smoke screen" for trying to protect their market share).

I was so excited to think of poor children in rural and urban areas being able to have access to the internet at speeds similar to those my kids can access since I can afford Comcast's $50/month fee. And unlike some well intentioned efforts to help people in need, there is a market driven strategy behind this model that makes it sustainable and "cost free" to the government. It seems win-win for everyone: poor families get the internet; taxes don't go up to accomplish this; the government gets paid for the spectrum through royalties over time; and all Americans have access to the internet when traveling, without having to pay $80 a month for a wireless broadband product. Oftentimes fixing a social problem is terribly complex or prohibitively expensive. This time (re. the digital divide) all that is necessary is to ask a company that's willing to do it for us.

I'm flabbergasted that my government would shoot this down. At the end of the day, life is about helping people. It's not about protecting the "rights" of companies to equal process to spectrum. Our system failed to keep that in mind when considering M2Z's request. Surely it's not too late to do the right thing.

My family and I volunteer weekly to help Hispanic families in our area. Many of these families are parented by wonderful parents who are trapped in menial jobs. M2Z's plan along with many other efforts by people of good will would give their kids a shot at something better. Please use your positions of influence to advocate for what will best serve real people; especially those with big needs and a lot of catching up to do across the digital divide.

Sincerely,
Ben Pierce

Robert McDowell
Commissioner, Federal Communications Commission

Dear Robert McDowell:

The FCC has not only done a disgrace to the American public but because of its actions is now the epitomization of that term. As long as the American public remains ignorant on the manner the FCC will be able to get away with this deliberately misguided decision. Needless to say that Big Media shares a great share of responsibility for people's ignorance on the subject as they do with Net Neutrality and media consolidation. There is no rational reason for being against M2Z's proposal other than greed and power. From this decision ensues an inevitable truth, will Mr. Kevin J Martin, Jonathan S Adelstein, Michael J Copps, Deborah Taylor Tate, and Robert McDowell be remembered as the individuals who prevented this from happening? If you want to hold by your decision that's fine but remember this: in your last years, when you will find yourselves in the security of your gated communities let this decision eat away at your mental balance. Next time you cross the street do not wonder why people will look at you with a great sense of piety, as you can only blame yourselves. I know that my Senator has already made the right decision and I salute him for the countless other times as there are too many to be listed here, the question is: will you? Take a deep breath and look yourselves in the mirror for a second. This letter is more than a plead it's a personal attack against your federal agency, an accumulation of feedback to your policies. Look up FCC in the dictionary as you will find that it's not far from the word idiot. It will be defined as a parasitic organism on the face of the earth that has outlived its necessity in the reedited version of Merriam Webster 2020. The online version of course. Free access to information is not a privilege Mr. Kevin, it's a right. I demand that you overturn your decision immediately if you don't want to carry the burden of shame for the rest of your life.

Sincerely,

David Leuba
